OBSERVE ANNUAL CUSTOM

OLDEST INHABITANTS CELEBRATE THE NATION'S ANNIVERSARY.

Reading of Declaration of Independence and Patriotic Address-The Officers Re-Elected.

The anniversary of the nation's birthday is annually celebrated by the Association of the Oldest Inhabitants in a public meeting, at which the Declaration of Independence is read and a patriotic address is made by some citizen specially invited to ress, and the very life of the nation. It do so. Today the association observed the would be as the man who placed an iron do so. Today the association electrical would be as the man who placed an iron custom, holding its meeting at the Corbard around a tree and then expected it to coran building, Mr. Smith Thompson, one of the oldest members of the organization, reading Jefferson's famous paper, while Mr. Henry E. Davis, a well-known member of the District bar, delivered the address. Immediately after Mr. Davis' address the active and honorary members of the asso-ciation proceeded to the treasury steps for the purpose of being photographed. Then they returned to the rooms of the associa-tion in the Corcoran building, where they and their guests enjoyed a collation.

Business Meeting. A business meeting of the association was first held, Mr. John Marbury, jr., the president of the organization, presiding. At this preliminary meeting, which was de-voted to the transaction of routine business, the following were elected as members of the association: John Johnson, Franklin T. Howe and Wm. B. Brittain. Dr. J. T. Howard announced the death of Peter F. Bacon, A. J. Schwartz and Joseph Williamson, members of the association, since its meeting on Washington's birthday. Williamson, members of the association, since its meeting on Washington's birthday. After this announcement, the annual election of officers of the association followed, and upon the motion of Mr. J. Madison Cutts the incumbents of the offices were unanimously re-elected, as follows: President, John Marbury, jr.; vice presidents, John W. Clark, Wm. Beron, N. D. Larner, F. W. Brandenburg, Jacob Veihmeyer, A. H. Ragan, B. C. Wright, G. H. Langley, P. M. Dubant, Rudolph Eichhorn and S. J. Fague; recording secretary, Joseph T. Howard, M.D.; treasurer, Joseph Prather; marshal, J. A. Wineberger.

The vacancies ocasioned by death in the office of vice president during the year were filled by the election of S. Thos. Brown and Fredk L. Moore.

Dr. J. W. Clarke presented to the association a fac simile of the original Declaration of Independence, which had been in his possession for lifty years, and a vote of thanks was tendered Dr. Clarke for his gift.

gift.

Mr. Max Lansburgh, on behalf of Mr.

W. B. Williams, presented to the association a fine marble bust of George Washington, together with a stand therefor, and Mr. Williams was tendered a vote of thanks

Mr. Williams was tendered a vote of thatas for his donation.

This concluded the business of the association, and after "America" had been sung President Marbury introduced Mr. Smith Thompson, who read the Declaration of Independence. Despite the fact that he is within twelve months of being eighty years of age, Mr. Thompson read the immortal paper in fine vote add amaner, and was rewarded with enthusiastic applause.

Address by Mr. Davis. Mr. Marbury next in roduced Mr. Henry E. Davis, who took as his subject the Dec-laration of Independence. Mr. Davis referred to the famous document as the chart by which the people of this country must depend to ascertain where they are and from where they came. He reviewed the political lifetime of the nation, holding that from where they came. He reviewed the political lifetime of ther nation, holding that through the Declaration of Independence this country and the world have been leavened with the leaven of political liberty. The Declaration of Independence, declared Mr. Davis, was an act, not a political or philosophical essay, and the only result possible was war.

Too much importance, said Mr. Davis, has been given the mere words of the immortal paper Jefferson wrote, and he pointed out that while that paper declares that all men are equal and entitled to liberty, yet the man who drew it was himself the owner of human property. The heart of the Declaration of Independence, remarked Mr. Davis, is in the act which gave birth to it, and not in its phrases. The act was a protest against a tyrannical king and his more tyrannical ministers, and a warning that, other means failing, resort would be had by the people of the American colonies to the sword. to the sword.

The advancement and progress of this country sprang from this resort to the sword, and it is destiny that we and the other nations of the world must resort to the sword even today. Without taking sides, Mr. Davis deciared that the Boer and the Englishman, the Chinaman and the allied powers, are today fighting for what each believes is right, and that is all our fathers did. The people of this country were born in blood, they walked through blood in childhood and young manhood, and until God changes human events we will continue to walk through blood, he continued.

Not an Unalterable Creed.

While professing the greatest admiration and respect and love for the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution, Mr. Davis said neither amounts to an unalter able creed. To biindly follow their text would, he asserted, be to destroy our proggrow. The country must and pointing to the marvelous grow or die territory of the United States he declared that it was and is our destiny.

Mr. Davis referred cay, said Mr. Davis, it must grow or die,

Mr. Davis referred to the fact that the world is today engaged in war in many places, and he declared that the sword is the ultimate debater in all things, every principle in the history of the world having sooner er later been vindicated by the sword. Christ himself, said Mr. Davis, deciared: "I come to bring not peace, but a sword," and such will be the history of the world until indeed the peace of which Christ preached has filled the world.

Mr. Davis' address was a most eloquent effort, and received a most enthusiastic reception from the members of the association and their guests, of whom many of the latter were ladies. He and Mr. Thompson were given a vote of thanks, and Mr. Davis was made an honorary member of the association.

Those Present.

Among the members present were: Andrew Barbour, Sebastian Bauer, Charles Behrens, Washington O. Berry, James T. Bolseau, William Beron, S. Thomas Brown, J. D. Cathell, J. W. Clarke, J. passing down with a train, running at a good rate of speed, to the lower end of the yard. On nearing the shops a switch was discovered open. Before the train could be stopped the engine struck a train of gasoline tanks.

Several officials of the road happened to be here, and, as is usual in an accident of the kind, they fired a cannon shot at the remaining tanks of oil, in order to let the fluid out.

Instantly after the shot had hit the tank it exploded.

A Scene of Horror. Everywhere were to be seen chunks quuman flesh. Dead bodies were scattered the surrounding territory.

The dead:

J. H. Hamilton, general superintendent
Bradley Reeves, engineer.
Edward Shannon, telegrapher.
Yardmaster Carr.
Master Mechanic Lalime.

— Bradford, conductor.
Between twenty-five and thirty-five injured were lying helpless about and under the mass of debris. They were removed as rapidly as possible to the city hospital.

Many of the injured were suffering internally from the concussion of the explosion, while others were frightfully maimed by flying bits of iron and wood.
